Keynoter of Note at ILTA '09

THOMAS M. KOULOPOULOS is the founder of Delphi Group, a 20-year-old Boston-based thought leadership firm providing advice on leading edge technologies to global 2000 organizations and government. He sold Delphi to Perot Systems in 2004 and today serves as Managing Director of a global innovation lab.

Named one of the industry's most influential information management consultants by InformationWeek magazine, Tom is recognized as an authority on the implications of information technology on global organizations, with articles and market insights appearing frequently in national and international print and broadcast media such as BusinessWeek, the Wall Street Journal, Forbes, The Economist, CNBC, CNN and NPR.

As the author of seven books, Tom has drawn wide praise from luminaries such as Peter Drucker, Dee Hock, and Tom Peters, who called his writing, "a brilliant vision of where we must take our enterprises to survive and thrive." According to Peter Drucker, Koulopoulos' writing "makes you question not only the way you run your business but the way you run yourself."

Tom has also been an adjunct professor at the Boston College Wallace E. Carroll Graduate School of Management and a guest lecturer at the Boston University School of management and Harvard University.

In selecting Tom, our Conference Co-Chairs Michele Gossmeier and Maureen Babcock note that Tom has solid credentials, a strong technology background and an incredible enthusiasm for our organization and how well it fits with his strengths. Tom talks a lot about innovation in service organizations struggling with limited resources, and the cultural issues connected with implementing and dealing with technologies.
